Purpose & Goals

The Grand Junction Commission on Arts and Culture is a nine-member board appointed by the City Council and dedicated to developing a climate where arts and culture will thrive and grow.

As one measure of cultural development, the Commission completes periodic surveys to document the economic and social impacts of local arts and cultural organizations (both nonprofit and governmental) that provide arts and cultural activities in the Grand Valley.

This report also includes data about for profit arts-related businesses—the creative industries in Mesa County—galleries, architects, graphic designers, musicians, photographers, radio & television, movies & videos.

The purpose of this report is to provide valid data to illustrate the fact that the local arts industry is both an economic engine as well as a catalyst for an active and engaged community. The compilation of measurable economic and social impacts of the arts and creative industries highlights how the arts affect the Grand Valley in many ways, from providing jobs to promoting tourism to enhancing quality of life. It shows that supporting the arts is a sound financial investment in the long-term health of the community.

Arts Attendance & Cultural Activities

During 2006 approximately 552,046 people were welcomed at arts and cultural events and facilities in the Grand Valley. This is over four times the entire population of Mesa County!

- 1962 total events & activities
- 307,657 visits to museum & art gallery exhibits & local libraries (open 2250 days)
- 88,990 attended concerts/film/theater/dance performances at 1080 events
- 123,330 attended 4 festivals and 489 special events
- 19,840 participated in 389 workshops or classes
- 30,000 tuned in to community/public radio & television
- 98,334 cultural attendees from outside Mesa Co. (est.)

Permanent cultural facilities include the Art Center, Botanical Gardens, Museum of Western Colorado, all the Mesa County Libraries, Johnson Art Gallery at Mesa State College and Art on the Corner. These facilities are unique in that they are open an average of 269 days per year. They require significant resources to operate and maintain and welcome thebulk of the arts and cultural attendees.

In 2006 all of these facilities were visited by over 380,454 visitors, approximately 80% of those were Mesa County residents. Arts and cultural facilities play an important role in the education of the youth of the community and provide the entire population with access to important historical and creative resources.

In fact 283,000 visitors attended facilities or events for free in 2006. Other museum and gallery visits include displays in public venues by clubs organized to support their membership.

The performing arts category includes a variety of dance, music, theater, and film. Non-profit organizations in this category are both formal and informal and performed between one and 120 performances in 2006. Attendance in this category totaled 88,990 to 1,080 total performances.

Included in this category are organizations such as Colorado West Area Square Dance Council, Two Chairs Theater, Cinema at the Avalon, Grand Mesa Chorus of Sweet Adelines, Riverfront Concert Series and Grand Junction Musical Arts Association. The vast majority of the organizations do not have paid staff. In fact, all of the organizations in this category combined have less than 7 full time staff, amounting to over 10,000 attendees per full time staff person.

Four major art or cultural festivals were held in 2006 with 29,000 in attendance, including the Art & Jazz Festival, Cinco de Mayo, Oktoberfest, and the Renaissance Faire.

Three hundred eighty-nine workshops or classes were conducted by organizations in virtually every category—literary, music, visual arts, cultural, botanical, and historical. These workshops provided the public with opportunities to learn skills in areas such as painting, ceramics, wood carving, and fiber arts.

Many of the workshops were organized for each group’s members. Thirty-six percent of the organizations were created primarily for the benefit of their members, as artists guilds or cultural clubs, but have significant activities meant for the enjoyment of the population as a whole, such as demonstrations and displays.

Income

The aggregate income of all the Grand Valley’s arts and cultural organizations and governmental arts agencies in 2006 totaled $10,775,524 with an additional $246,565 in in-kind contributions, totaling $11,023,080. Overall income is shown in four categories:

- Earned income (tickets, sales, workshop, etc.) $ 3,112,718
- Government income, grants, and subsidies $ 6,419,139
- Corporate and business donations $ 984,592
- Individual donations $ 259,075

Total Revenues all organizations & agencies $ 10,775,524

Revenues of the non-profit organizations (excluding governmental agencies, i.e. Mesa State College’s Continuing Education, Art, Theater, Music, and Dance, the Mesa County Public Library District, and the Commission on Arts and Culture) totaled $4,530,609:

- Earned income (tickets, sales, workshops, etc.) $ 2,758,753
- Government income, grants, and subsidies $ 616,100
- Corporate and business donations $ 902,681
- Individual donations $ 253,075

Total Revenues non-profit arts organizations $ 4,530,609

Employment Opportunities

Arts and cultural non-profit organizations provide employment opportunities for Grand Valley residents.

- In 2006 over 137 full time equivalent jobs were provided by 18 different organizations.
- $5,645,321 in personnel costs were paid in 2006
- Employment increased by 8% from 2000 (up 10 FTE jobs)
- 30% of arts and cultural organizations have paid staff
- 60% of arts and cultural organizations employ paid staff and/or independent contractors

In addition to staff, 298 independent contractors were hired in various capacities by a total of 35 organizations. Fourteen organizations provided full time employment and fifteen part-time.

A total of 199 full and part-time employees worked in the arts and cultural industry in 2006, which is about the number of people it takes to staff one super Wal-Mart store.

Spending

The Grand Valley arts and cultural organizations collectively spent $10,111,458 on personnel, program and administrative expenditures in 2006. (As a point of comparison, this number is roughly equal to Mesa State College’s total non-salary expenditures for 05/06 of $10,861,187.)

Capital expenditures by arts and cultural organizations added an additional $895,160 to the local economy, much of that at the central library, for a spending total of $11,006,618.

In-kind contributions amounted to an additional $246,565. In-kind (non-cash) donations generally represent services that organizations would normally pay for but are donated by members of the community, for example, legal or accounting services.

Economic Impact

The Economic Impact of the arts and cultural organizations can be displayed in spending as well as employment. Direct expenditures coupled with capital expenditures equal $11,006,618.

Just as with any business or organization, this spending ripples out into the community and has an impact on all other businesses. Indirect economic impacts are the second wave of purchases made by the organizations, employees, and vendors of arts and cultural organizations which add to the overall economic impact.

Every $1 of spending by arts and cultural organizations generates an average $1.42 for other all the other businesses within the community, according to the CO Business Committee for the Arts’ Economic Activity Study of Metro-Denver Culture and U. S. Dept. of Commerce Bureau of Economic Analysis.

The nonprofit and governmental organizations and agencies in the Grand Valley who provide arts and cultural programs and facilities had a $27 million economic impact on the community in 2006.

Volunteers

The true story of how the vast numbers of arts and cultural events and activities can be offered each year is told by the number of volunteers and volunteer hours invested by area residents:

- 3099 volunteers in 2006
- 144,795 volunteer hours which equals approximately 70 FTE employees

The generosity of the local volunteer contingent translates to $2.7 million in dollar value by the IRS. Twenty three organizations or almost 40% of those surveyed were sustained solely by volunteers. Only eight organizations did not report volunteer hours.

The number of volunteers working with the arts and cultural organizations increased by 50% from 2000 to 2006, by 1088 volunteers, although the number of volunteer hours remained virtually the same.
Mesa County has 255 arts-related businesses that employ 883 people, according to research by Americans for the Arts, a nationwide association. These numbers are taken from Dun & Bradstreet data – widely acknowledged as the most comprehensive and trusted source of business information in the U.S. – and use D & B’s Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) codes to create the Mesa County list of arts-centric commercial operations.

These “creative industries” are businesses based on artistic or creative endeavors, including artists, art galleries and picture framers, architects and interior designers, graphic designers, musicians and entertainers, art supply and music stores, photographers and photography studios, radio and television, and audio, video, and movie productionsales/rentals.

Survey & Methodology

The Arts Commission partnered with Thea Chase, Assistant Professor of Business at Mesa State College to accomplish this survey and the analysis of statistics from local arts and cultural organizations.

A questionnaire was mailed to all 64 known arts and cultural organizations in the Grand Valley, including Grand Junction, Fruita, and Palisade. Of the organizations surveyed, information was gathered for all but six – 90% of the total number, which includes 100% of all the major organizations (those with paid staff and budgets of any size.)

The statistics in this survey are for arts and cultural activities, employees, audience attendance, revenue, and expenditures during each organization’s last completed fiscal year, which was, for the most part, 2006. Information for a dozen organizations who did not respond to the current questionnaire was taken from their survey forms for fiscal year 2000.

Statistics about the for-profit arts-related business sector was compiled by Americans for the Arts, a national arts association, in a report entitled The Creative Industries in Mesa County, CO and are current as of January 2007.
